DE LESSEPS VERY ILL

Delirium Followed by Coma That Has Lasted Several Days.

His Wife Says the Enormity of the Sentence Will Protect Him.

It seems to be easy work for these enterprising burgians to get in, and they usually effect an entrance by way of basement doors and windows or over back yard fences.

GEBHARD WANTS HIS SHARE.

He Sues for a Partition of the Estate Left by His Grandsire.

When Thomas E. Davis, of this city, died, in 1874, a part of his large estate went to his two grandchildren, Frederick Gebhard, the well-known turtman and clubman, and his respective shares were to be held in trust der the will and they were only to receive the income from the property until they at-tained the age of thirty years, when they were to receive their interests absolutely. In 1887 Mrs. Nellson conveyed her prospective share to trustees to hold for hor and pay her the inceme for her life and at her death diviso it among her children.

Owing to these compilications, Frederick Gebhard, who, as well as his sister, has long since been entitled to receive his respective share, is bringing a partition suit in the supreme Court to have his interest in his grandfather's estate turned ever to him. He brings the suit in the interest of his sister, Mrs. Nellson, as well.

The estate was divided into twenty-four parts at Mr. Davis's death and distributed among his seven children in trust.

Brilliant One To-Day.

The Track Will Be Slow and Deep-The Betting.

It is not a very brilliant programme that the Hudson County Jockey Club puts before racegoers to-day. There are one or two good races, but the majority are unattractive and do not promise to be interesting contests.

The fourth race is another of the long distance races at a mile and a half. Laura S., Sir George II., Fred Lee and Glenlochy ought to furnish a good race. The five-furlong dash with Sweetbread, Repeater, Tasso, I. O. U., Relief, Van Wart and Lucy Clark entered, also looks interesting.

The track will be deep and slow.

The entries and selections, together with the betting as quoted in the poolrooms this morning, follow:

the East River.

The fair prisoner is about twenty-five years old, and lived with her husband, Henry Hayden, at 155 Prospect street, Brooklyn. The couple have no children. Shortly before 11 o'clock last night the shortly before it o clock has high they young woman was seen running down Bridge street towards the dock. Nobody paid any attention to her movements, as it is not an unusual scene in that neighborhood for women to be seen hastening through the street at late beauts.

that neighborhood for women to be seen hastening through the street at late hours.

The woman disappeared in the darkness, and she would probably have drowned had not Capt. John Carrom, of the canal-boat John Cross, heard a splash in the water. His boat lay near the dock.

He called James Mallory, a laborer on Pile Driver No. 4 and the two men went to the woman's assistance.

She was struggling in the water, and appeared to be sinking. A rope was secured and thrown to her, but she refused to grasp it and save herself.

Carrom and Mallory then secured a boat and rowed out to where the woman was struggling. When they attempted to rescue her she fought with all her might to escape their clutches.

They finally succeeded in getting a stout grasp on her and she was dragged into the boat and taken ashore. An ambulance was summoned, and Surgeon Dent removed her to the hospital.

The police visited the hospital later, and the woman denied that she had attempted to end her life. She declared that she had gone down to the dock and had fallen overboard.

Her husband told a different story. He said that when he reached home last night his wife was under the influence of liquor. He upbraided her for her conduct, and they quarrelled. She put on her cloak and left the house at 10.30 o'clock, saying:

"You will never see me again."

Hayden paid no attention to her, as he thought she would return. He was surprised that she had been found in the river, and the police report that he said he wished the canal-boat had sunk before the men got her out of the river.

CHARGED WITH BIGAMY.

Brooklyn Brewer Arrested. Philip Baumgartner, brewer, of 927

Philip Baumgartner, brewer, of 327 Grand street, Williamsburg, was arrested and brought before Justice Goetting in the Lee Avenue Police Court this morning on a charge of bigamy.

Oct. 24, 1885, Fredoline Niedermeyer was married to Baumgartner by Rev. John Meury, of the Hopkins Street Evangelical Missionary Church. They did not live happily together, and after three years of married life the wife left him because of his alleged extreme crucity. With her two children she went to Connecticut to live.

From that time until a few days ago she never saw her husband.

A month ago Mrs. Baumgartner heard that her husband had been married again, and she at once came on to investigate it. On the advice of a lawyer she called at Baumgartner's residence and obtained from the unsuspicious wife full particulars of the marriage. In this way she ascertained that Baumgartner was married to Elise Wendel June 21, 1891, by Pastor Flamman, of the Humboldt Street Evangelical Church. She then procured a warrant for Baumgartner's arrest.
